

IRENE GREAVES

Lovescaping

Irene Greaves is the author, founder, and CEO of Lovescaping, a philosophy of life and organization with the mission to teach love in action as a core life skill. Born in Venezuela and shaped by her global journey—from Europe to Africa, Asia, and the Americas—Irene's work is rooted in a profound question: Where did you learn to love? Her lived experience, combined with an M.Ed. from the University of Pennsylvania, led to a powerful realization: love must be intentionally taught. Through 15 core values like humility, empathy, and liberation, Lovescaping offers a practical framework for teaching love. Irene brings this work to children and adults—from schools to companies—creating spaces of belonging and trust. Her 2018 book reflects her commitment to transforming education—and society—by putting love at the center. Her goal: to make love a core subject in schools.

“Learning to love is humanity’s most urgent need—a daily practice, an intentional action, a skill we can teach, embody, and share.”
